Foreword

IN the publication of this brief history of first the colony, then village and now incorporated city of Delavan, Illinois, whose people—together with the residents of the countryside roundabout—compose what we commonly term the Community of Delavan, the subscriber hereeto desires to acknowledge with appreciation and thanks the services of the representatives of the Federal Writers' Project of the Works Progress Administration, by whom the data for its contents were sought out, assembled, edited, and reduced to what I am sure all readers will agree to be a readable and interesting narrative. If there be in the latter something to praise, let the credit be theirs.

Like acknowledgements are made to the Delavan Community club, Starr H. Beatty, president; the Delavan Centennial Committee, Samuel H. Lawton, chairman, and Edith Pittsford, Chairman of the Community Club's Committee on Historical Research, and their associates, for their part in the enterprise. It was their initiative, interest and willing co-operation that encouraged the Mayor and City Council of the City of Delavan to undertake the publication hereof, consummate the same and underwrite the cost.

This booklet is dedicated to the memory and honor of the men and women, past and present, resident and non-resident, who by their lives and works from 1837 up to the present happy centennial occasion 1937 have made contributions to the vital being of Delavan—giving it through many varied channels of expression and activity its character, personality, spirit, individuality, atmosphere: So that now, on the threshold of its second century, it holds the love and honor of all who have ever called Delavan "home." May Delavan's sons and daughters of the newly opening scroll of years do as well by her as have their forebears.

OLD CIVIL WAR CANNON
Preface

DELAVAN, a chronicle of 100 years, is one of the publications of the Federal Writers' Project of the Works Progress Administration. Designed primarily to give useful employment to needy unemployed writers and research workers, this project has gradually developed the ambitious objective of presenting to the American people a portrait of America—its history, folklore, scenery, cultural backgrounds, social and economic trends, and racial factors. In one respect, at any rate, this undertaking is unique: it represents a far-flung effort at cooperative research and writing, drawing upon all the varied abilities of its personnel. All the workers contribute according to their talents; the field worker collects data in the field, the research worker burrows in libraries, the art and literary critics cover material relevant to their own specialties, architects describe notable historical buildings and monuments; and the final editing of copy as it flows in from all corners of a state is done by the more experienced writers in the central offices. The ultimate product, whatever its faults or merits, represents a blend of the work of the entire personnel, aided by consultants, members of the university faculties, officers of learned societies, and oldest residents, who have volunteered their services everywhere most generously.

A great many books and brochures are being written for this series. As they appear in increasing numbers we hope the American public will come to appreciate more fully not only the unusual scope of this undertaking, but also the devotion shown by the workers, from the humblest field worker to the most accomplished editors engaged in the final rewrite. The Federal Writers' Project, directed by Henry G. Alsberg, is in the Division of Women's and Professional Projects under Ellen S. Woodward, Assistant Administrator.

General Information

There are two railroads in Delavan, the Illinois Central and the Alton Road, both of which use the Union Station, Fifth and Chestnut Streets.

Blackhawk Motor Coaches stop at the intersection of Illinois 122 with Illinois 24, 5 miles west of Delavan.

One paved road, Illinois 122, connects with Illinois 24 west of Delavan, and Illinois 121, 5 miles east.

Accommodations include one hotel, three restaurants, and four garages. Tourist rooms may be found along Illinois 122.

There are two picture shows.
Delavan of Today

DELVAN, (alt. 605; pop. 1,084), on a high rolling prairie between the two branches of Crane Creek, three miles north of the southern boundary of Tazewell County, Illinois, is a modern community typical of the Illinois corn belt. Although progressive in thought and act, it preserves the dignity and ideals of its founders, who migrated here from Rhode Island a century ago to found a new city. When approached from any direction, Delavan comes into view as a thick wood against the horizon. Upon entering its boundaries, the impression is that the town must have been hewn from some primeval forest—so large are the trees which line its streets. In truth, when Delavan's site was chosen, no vegetation more formidable than tall prairie grass grew anywhere in the vicinity, with the exception of a lone cottonwood about three miles to the south.

Delavan is definitely and perhaps happily not an urban community. Its homes, for the most part spacious, well painted, and in good repair, are flanked by generous lawns and great-girthed trees. Violets and dwarf blue irises awaken with the spring, to give place to the balcony blue petunias that grow in most sections of the town in studied profusion, and are the official bloom of Delavan. The wide main streets are of concrete. Side streets, equally wide, are graveled and many are oiled. Throughout the town, the buildings—many of them mellowed by time—the vine-covered churches, and the modern schools, library, and stores, present an air of contentment and prosperity.

Trade that is dying out in many small cities since the advent of the hard surfaced roads is still alive here. Well-stocked stores serve the community. Grain, which once made Delavan a flourishing center with flour shipped as far as Cuba, England, and Scotland, remains an important factor; although the mills have long been closed. Elevators handle large quantities of grain grown on the farms of the neighborhood and ship it to the markets of the world. Although retail business and grain shipping are the bulk of the commercial activity, there is trade in automobiles, farm equipment, and building supplies. The town's only manufacturing enterprise is a factory specializing in wagon and truck scales. Two railroads, the Alton and the Illinois Central, furnish freight and passenger service, and Illinois Highway 122 connects with the paved highways of the State.
The urge for speed and wasteful haste is foreign to the town of Delavan. The door of the little jail stands open. Churches, civic and social clubs, the library, and a motion picture show operating three times a week, offer inspiration, instruction, and entertainment.

Religion plays an important part in the life of the city. Approximately 90 per cent of the citizens of Delavan attend some church. There are five churches in the city.

Delavan's social life centers mainly about its homes, but 21 fraternal, cultural, and service clubs play an important part in civic activities.

Delavan today is the realization of the dreams and toil of its founders.

A MODERN SWIMMING POOL
Delavan of Yesterday

THE first known occupation of any part of what is now Tazewell County, Illinois, was in the middle of January, 1680, when Robert Cavelier, Sieur de La Salle, erected and occupied Fort Creve Coeur, on the river bank near the present village of Creve Coeur. LaSalle's stay was brief, lasting only until the first of March of that same year. During the summer, Tonty, in temporary charge of the fort left on a hunting and exploring expedition and during his absence the remainder of the garrison partially demolished the fort and deserted. The fort was restored and served as a trading post until the entire French force maintained in the western country was moved to the newly constructed Fort St. Louis, near Utica, Ill.

From this time until the War of 1812, only an occasional white trapper or hunter visited the vicinity. During the war with England, Gov. Ninian Edwards led a force of 400 men from the southern part of the Illinois Territory, into what is now Tazewell County. His party burned several Indian villages, engaged in a battle with Pottawatomies in Fondulac Township and captured Black Partridge's village on Ten Mile Creek near the upper end of Peoria Lake. In the Twenties, settlements sprang up across the river from Peoria, at Mackinaw, Dillon, Washington and at Town Site, now Pekin. These were followed in the early Thirties by Tremont, Circleville, and Groveland. Beyond these towns, and below the Mackinaw River, was a large tract of silt loam known as High Prairie, which for a long time was generally avoided. Only a few settlers made their homes there. This prairie loam—about 18 inches deep on a subsurface of 22 inches of yellowish brown clay, resting on a bed of glacial sand and gravel—was an extremely fertile and well-drained section, yet it remained a hunting ground for the Pottawatomies while the nearby territory was being settled.

But in 1836, Jonas R. Gale of Providence, R. I., visited the Illinois Country in search of land suitable for settlement. After purchasing a tract in the vicinity of Alton, on his return East he stopped at the Dillon settlement for a visit with Ebenezer Wright, a friend who had migrated there from Massachusetts. High Prairie immediately appealed to him as a town site, for the fertility of the land round about would insure the success of a new trading center. At Tremont he met Edward Cornelius Delavan of Albany, N. Y., retired merchant, land promoter and ardent early American temperance advocate. Together they planned the promotion of a settlement on High Prairie, and at Providence, R. I., on September 19, 1836, another land company to exploit the Illinois Country was organized. Financed largely by Mr. Delavan under the name of the Delavan Association, the new company had a capitalization of $30,000. The following men had stock in the organization: John Jenckes, James Brown, Henry R. Green, David C. Green, Samuel B. Harris, Mnason L. Allin, Vinal N. Edwards, Samuel B., Daniel C., George W. and Benjamin F. Cushing, William C. Cooke, Jonas R. Gale and D. C. Jenckes. Members of the executive committee, who also composed the locating committee, were: Henry R. Green, Mnason L. Allin, Samuel B. Harris and Jonathan B. Sears. It was decided to name the new city Delavan, in honor of the noted temperance advocate and that the city should be devoid of all liquor-selling establishments.

Heads of 50 families agreed to settle in the new city, or send substitutes to do so. The executive committee members, who were required to furnish bond, were directed to travel through the States and Territories of Ohio, Indiana, Michigan, or Wisconsin, and to inspect personally any lands under the association’s consideration. They were further directed to proceed with the “purchasing out and removing therefrom, the settlers thereon found.” No records show they made such trip.

The public welfare of the proposed settlement was protected in an authorization of “not exceeding $7,000 as shall be requisite to build a suitable Temperance House and the necessary outbuildings and appendages,” and “so much money as may be requisite, not exceeding $1,000, for a public school house for the common benefit of the association.” Provision was also made by the directors for a “public square or common for use of the inhabitants forever,” with the stipulation that in case it should at any time be put to other use, the site should revert to the stockholders of the association.

As a promotional feature, a plat was drawn showing 160-acre tracts of land, with a town site in the center. These tracts were sold at auction at Washington Hall in Providence, November 21, 1856. Advertisements of the sale were placed in Providence, R. I., and Taunton, Mass., newspapers. With each farm was given a town lot in the “City of Delavan.” This was to be used by the settlers as a winter home site. Lots in the proposed city were to be 200 feet square, according to the articles of agreement, but when the plat was drawn for the auction, the lots were designated as 300 feet square. Bidding, stimulated by propaganda, was spirited, and the prices of “choice lots” ranged upward to $1,000, a sum which would have purchased 800 acres in the immediate vicinity. A feature of the land sale was the display of a map of Delavan, illustrated with the picture of a steam-boat drawn up to the wharf at the mill site (N. Locust St.), on Little Crane Creek. This creek would be difficult to negotiate in a canoe. At the sale, $10 was required as earnest money, the rest being payable on demand of the association. Deacon Henry R. Green, as financial agent, entered 22,000 acres of land in what is now Delavan Township, Tazewell County, in February 1837, but the plat of the town, which contained 54 blocks plus the hotel block and the public square, each containing four lots, was not recorded until February 1, 1841.

The first activity in the settlement was in May 1837, with the arrival of an advance party of carpenters and builders, headed by W. W. Grossman. A cabin was hastily erected for temporary living quarters, and the work was started on the Colony House—a three-story frame building in which it was intended to house new settlers until their homes were erected. The site selected was the high ground at what is now the S. E. corner of Chestnut and Third Streets. Lumber for the Colony House was shipped from the East, part of it coming from Providence, down the Atlantic coast, through the Gulf of Mexico and up the Mississippi and Illinois Rivers to Pekin. From Pekin it was hauled 18 miles in ox-carts and wagons. Other consignments of lumber came from Pittsburgh, down the Ohio, and up the Mississippi and Illinois to Pekin. The timbers were cut along the Mackinaw River, five miles to the north, and were carted over the prairie to Delavan.

When two rooms of the Colony House were completed, Mrs. Grossman—who had accompanied her husband from the East, but who had remained in Tremont during the first construction period—came to Delavan. She was the first woman in the colony. That was on October 1st. Two more rooms were completed that fall, and the remainder of the building in the following spring. As was to be expected in a colony based upon temperance principles, cultural facilities were not overlooked. Very soon the construction of a school house was begun. This building was used as an educational center until 1860, and also served as a general meeting place, and for church purposes.

Few of the enrolled members of the association moved to the colony, and growth was much slower than its organizers had anticipated. Only five houses were built by the association. Transportation facilities were limited to wagons and carts, and the markets for grain and livestock were miles away over prairie trails, rutted and dusty in dry times, and hub-deep in mud when it rained. Supplies had to be hauled over these roads. Dillon, seven miles away, was the nearest village, and Pekin the nearest outlet for produce. At the Orndorff settlement were the nearest neighbors, and there the Delavan colonists went for butter and eggs. Twenty years after the land sale at Providence, Delavan had a population of 150, and when it was incorporated as a village in 1865, it had grown to nearly 500.

Until Deacon Henry R. Green established a steam saw and grist mill in 1839, the closest mill was near Dillon. In the same year, James West opened the first store, and secured an appointment as postmaster. Formerly, settlers had to travel to Tremont for mail and to do their trading. When the inhabitants of Delavan had erected their homes, the Colony House was leased to Ira B. Hall of Springfield, who opened it as a hotel in 1840. Mr. Hall was acquainted with many influential men at Springfield, a contact which proved valuable to his business. Four months after he took charge, the Chicago, Peoria and Springfield stage coach line, which had been passing a half mile west of Delavan, was induced to change its route. Thus the Delavan House (formerly the Colony House) became a scheduled station for the coach company, and a point where the four-horse teams were changed. Many noted men of Illinois stopped here, among them Abraham Lincoln, whose name appears on one of the old registers under the date of August 12, 1841, Stephen A. Douglas, Judge David Davis, Maj. Richard M. Cullom, father of Shelby M. Cullom; and Judge Stephen T. Logan. The ingenuity of the cook at the hotel is recalled in an anecdote, a portion of which can be verified. This enterprising individual, anxious to serve a piping hot meal to stage coach passengers, would watch the road from an upstairs window of the hotel and when the coach reached the huge cottonwood tree—the only tree on the prairie—would streak downstairs to the kitchen and put the potatoes on to fry. The potatoes and the passengers would reach the table at the same time.

Mr. Hall sold the hotel to James Phillips in 1845, and engaged in farming. He continued active in community enterprises, however, and was one of the promoters of the Petersburg & Tonica Railroad. in 1857, and of the Tazewell County National Bank in 1887, of which he later became vice president. He served as the second township supervisor in 1856 (succeeding W. W. Crossman, who had held that office for five years), and as a member of the State legislature in 1870.

After its sale, the hotel was known as the Phillips House, and was operated as a hostelry until it was destroyed by fire, August 28, 1879. In addition to his hotel interests, Mr. Phillips also owned and operated Phillips Hall, a center of cultural and recreational activity in the community, and was one of the earliest merchants of Delavan.

Another pioneer merchant was George Straut, who came from St. Louis, where he had been a blacksmith and a peddler merchant. Finding a market for his wares and for his services as a smith, he traded his wagon to Phillips and started a store. A year later he erected a building at the southwest corner of Second and N. Locust Streets. This building, still standing, is the oldest in Delavan. It is a low, rambling, one and one-half story house, now occupied as a residence. The stone for the foundation was blasted from two large boulders on the farm owned by W. R. Baldwin, northeast of the town. While hauling the stone, a team ran away and became founded in the slough, mired down, and both horses were killed.

Straut’s store became one of the leading stores within a radius of 20 miles. Straut also engaged in land promotion and had much to do with the founding of the towns of Minier and Mason City. He was also one of the promoters of the Petersburg & Tonica, and the Chicago, Alton & St. Louis Railroads. He sold a farm to James Ryan, who soon became discouraged because of the low price for grain. Straut advised him to “pile up his corn and hold it,” three or four years if necessary. Shortly after the outbreak of the Civil War, Ryan hauled his corn to market, realized more than $1 a bushel for the whole amount, and paid off his entire indebtedness. Many others during this early period paid for their farms from the returns from one or two crops.

Delavan played an important part in assisting slaves to escape from the South. The home of Daniel Cheever—built in the Fifties—was a “station” on the chain which constituted the “underground railway,” by means of which slaves were smuggled to an uncertain safety. Cheever was known for his indomitable anti-slavery convictions. Lumber used in the construction of the Cheever house—all hard-wood—was cut in the East and shipped by sea, river, and by ox-cart.

Communication facilities were increased in 1850 with the building of a telegraph line. Delavan, with both telegraph and stagecoach lines, had prospects of growth. But the promise was short lived, for four months later the telegraph wires were ripped out and the poles removed. Next the stage line was abandoned, leaving the village again marooned on the prairie, with their nearest shipping outlet Pekin, on the Illinois River, and after 1852, Atlanta, on the Chicago & Alton Railroad.

In 1855, two general stores, one operated by Ira S. Reed, the other by George F. Vincent, who was also postmaster, a tin shop operated by Perry D. Stockwell, and a hotel were the sole business enterprises of the village.

The first railroad chartered to run through Delavan was the Petersburg & Tonica, on which work was started in 1857. Grading was completed that year through Delavan, and nearly to Tullamore, but rails were laid only from Petersburg to Jacksonville before work was abandoned for lack of funds. A portion of Chestnut Street was vacated for the right of way. Ten years later the line was completed across Tazewell County under an agreement with the Chicago, Alton & St. Louis Railway, now a portion of the Alton Road. Under this agreement, Bloomington became the terminus of the line. George Straut of Delavan was active in the promotion of the company and later became its president. Other charter members were Albert Reynolds, Elijah N. Farnsworth, Jesse Hammers, Josiah Sawyer, Henry R. Green, John Bennet, William Glover, and William Crow. Richard Yates, later Civil War governor of Illinois, was the attorney who drew the charter.

Construction was started southwest of Bloomington and north of Jacksonville, the two crews meeting in the vicinity of Brownwood Station, near the northeast corner of Delavan Township. When the last spike was driven, a delegation of citizens headed by Ira B. Hall, J. H. McKinstry, and Mr. Straut, boarded the construction train from the eastern terminal, and rode to Delavan. Here a celebration was held. Miss Mollie Pratt, a belle of the village, rode the cow-catcher.

Delavan's other railroad, the Pekin, Lincoln & Decatur, connects it with Pekin, the county seat. This road was chartered and surveyed in 1867, but construction was not started until 1869. The citizens of Tazewell County were so anxious for this line to be laid that the county voted a grant of $100,000, Pekin added $75,000, and the smaller town of Delavan gave $50,000. Delavan also vacated a portion of Sixth Street, and gave a deed to the land for a right of way through the village. Grading was completed in 1870, but the rails, purchased in England, were delayed in delivery, arriving in August. The last track was not laid until late fall, when freight and passenger service was opened. Two elevators were erected for the handling of grain which formerly had to be carried to Atlanta or Pekin. Soon, with the establishment of additional stores, a newspaper, a bank, and a flour mill with a capacity of 100 barrels daily, Delavan became a thriving agricultural center.

City Government

It was not until 20 years after Delavan's settlement that any effort was made to organize a local government. The growth of the village was slow, and many residents of the community were opposed to wasting money on municipal government. However, on September 10, 1857, through the efforts of W. W. Crossman, Charles Grant, and others, an election held in the old Second District School resulted in a vote of 26 to 10 in favor of incorporating the village. But the village was not incorporated at that time. Sixty-five voters crowded into the Masonic Hall January 2, 1858, where Samuel Briggs acted as president of the election to name trustees and Samuel Lawton, clerk. Those elected to organize the village government were: John Sallard, James Phillips, John Kelley, John Ppham, and Quintus Orndorff. Among them were some of the bitterest opponents of incorporation and immediately the question was raised as to their qualifications for office. As a result all failed to qualify and the whole matter was dropped. A few years later the question of incorporation was again brought before the voters, with better results. The old animosities had died, and the opposing factions were able to agree. On October 2, 1865, the following trustees were elected: E. C. Jones, J. C. Appleton, William B. Orrell, P. Clark, and S. C. Hobart. At the first meeting of the board of trustees on October 5, Mr. Jones was selected as president, and S. P. Flint was appointed village clerk. Other appointments were: J. H. Upham, marshal; William Vaughn, collector; and D. L. Whittmore, treasurer.

Following the passage of a new State law, in July 1872, the village was re-incorporated. The new trustees were: Theodore Van Hague, president; William H. Phillips, clerk; P. D. Stockwell, Henry Kingman, John Carr, Arthur Stubbs and John Warne.

One of the most important issues coming before the village board in this period was that of licensing the sale of liquor. Delavan, founded as a temperance town, had always voiced its strong disapproval of intoxicants. In 1874 the board voted 4 to 2 against permitting the sale of alcoholic beverages within the limits of the village. When the issue was again raised in 1875 the board licensed the sale and permitted the business to operate for three years. In 1878 they again voted 4 to 2 against the sale of intoxicants and in 1879 the vote was unanimously opposed to liquor. Candidates in the elections for village office announced themselves as license or anti-license candidates, which was usually the sole issue of their campaign. In February 1897 a movement was started to put the question of dramshop licensing to a vote of the people. This culminated in presenting to the city council a petition requesting a direct vote on the subject. in the spring election. Ninety-one names appeared on the petition, and names of both opponents and proponents were included. A defect in the call for a special meeting of the council to consider the question of a direct vote was found after the session convened, and as there was not sufficient time to issue a call for another special meeting, the movement was lost. At the first meeting of the newly elected council that year, no licenses were issued, although it was voted to permit the payment of dramshop licenses quarterly instead of annually. Two weeks later at a special meeting of the council, three dramshop licenses were approved and a dry period of two weeks was ended. Saloons opened next morning. The dry forces continued their campaign. Two years later an equal number of license and anti-license members were elected to the council, leaving the decision to the mayor, and the saloons were closed. The battle continued between the two factions until 1913 when the question "Shall this Township continue to be Anti-Saloon territory?" received 352 affirmative votes and but 115 negative votes. After the repeal of the Eighteenth Amendment, but little interest was apparent on the question and tavern licenses were issued.
The village form of local government continued until 1888, when the voters decided upon a change in civic form and Delavan was incorporated as a city. The final incorporation papers were filed with the Secretary of State at Springfield on July 17, 1888. At an election to fill the newly created officers, S. M. Reinheimer was chosen as mayor; O. C. Hall, P. Clark, J. J. Frank, Fred Starz, E. S. Hobart, and J. O. Jones, as aldermen, and Frank B. Starz, as city clerk.

During the period that Delavan operated under the village form of government 17 men served as village presidents:

GEORGE STRAUT’S STORE — OLDEST BUILDING IN DELAVAN
Agriculture and Industry

AGRICULTURE, the sole pursuit of the early settlers, has continued as the principal industry of the country surrounding Delavan. It has also been the basis of several manufacturing enterprises of the city. Corn is the main crop. Wheat and oats are raised to divide the work throughout the different growing seasons, so that larger acreage may be farmed. The various clovers, alfalfa, and soy beans are grown as soil-replenishers, and also as a forage for livestock. Since grains and hay are more valuable when fed to livestock, many cattle and some sheep and horses are raised.

Reid’s Yellow Dent Corn

The pioneers experienced difficulty in producing satisfactory yields of corn, largely because seed from the East was not adapted to this region. They took every opportunity to replenish their seed stock by importing new supplies from various territories, but this was expensive, and seldom conducive to good corn raising. In 1847, Robert Reid planted the Gordon Hopkins variety of corn brought from Ohio, but due to late planting, got a very poor stand. He filled in the missing hills with seed known locally as Little Yellow, and this resulted in a hybrid stock of open-pollinated corn. From this he selected his seed for the next crop. Many “sports” appeared for the next few years, but careful selection resulted in seed suited to the soil. Later, James L. Reid, son of Robert Reid, took up the work on a scientific basis and succeeded in developing a distinctive variety of yellow corn, noted for its vigor, heavy yield, uniformity of color, large ears with deep rough grains, and high value as food or feed. It had a sturdy stalk, was uniform in height of stalk and location of ear on the stalk, and matured in 120 days from planting. By selecting seed from strong stalks of uniform height on which the ears, also at a uniform height, shot and tasselled early, filled with even-sized grains from butt to tip, and matured early, James L. Reid developed the variety which now bears his name. For three-quarters of a century, Reid’s Yellow Dent Corn has been the leading variety of yellow corn in the United States, although Mr. Reid received little return other than honors for his work. His fields always produced high yields of fine quality corn and neighbors soon began to get their seed corn from his stock. Samples were exhibited at the Tazewell County Fair at Delavan, and at the Illinois State Fair in Peoria, in 1879, winning blue ribbons at each showing. Highest honors were received at the World’s Columbian Exposition in Chicago in 1893, where a ten-ear sample was entered for the first time under the name, Reid’s
Yellow Dent Corn. Its fame spread, and in a short time Mr. Reid was shipping seed from Delavan to all parts of the country, and to foreign lands. At the State Fair in Springfield, in 1897, he exhibited 100 bushels, 60 pounds of corn, the product of one acre, on which he was awarded two first prizes and sweepstakes. The variety was recognized in the code of the Illinois Seed Corn Growers' Association in 1900, under the name given it by its originator. It is surpassed in yield only by occasional hybrid varieties, themselves based on this stock, but successive generations do not produce true to type, and hence are unsuitable as basic stock.

Farm Equipment

Cultivating corn in an early day was an arduous task. The only implements for such work were the hoe and the one-horse single plow. This problem was solved in 1879, however, when Reason Day and George Day, brothers, designed and built a riding cultivator. With William V. McKinstry, they started the manufacture of these cultivators, but after a year the enterprise was abandoned. There had been a loss of $35 on each of the implements. Later their idea was used in the manufacture of the Stately cultivator, which was widely used throughout the corn belt.
A corn husker, with rollers identical to those in use today, was designed at Delavan in 1870, by Dr. C. B. Maclay, local physician, inventor, and minister. His ideas, however, were too far advanced for popular acceptance, and no factory was set up. Shortly after, Quintus Orndorff designed and manufactured at Delavan a magnetic device for removing binder wires from grain separators. This enterprise was short-lived because a few years later manila fiber came into use to tie grain bundles.

Flouring Mills

A steam powered custom mill was started in Delavan by Deacon Henry R. Green in 1839, and another was started by John L. Orndorff in 1861 which lost $10,000 for its promoter. It was not until 29 years after Deacon Green’s initial effort that the town became a flour milling center. In 1868, Frederick Starz formed a partnership with Fred Lehman and Arthur Stubbs and set up and operated the Delavan City Mills. This mill blended locally raised wheat with western hard wheat, had a capacity of 100 barrels per day and shipped to England, Ireland, Scotland, and to Cuba. A second flouring mill, known as the Young America Mills, was started in 1870 by Mr. Stubbs and John B. Starz, a son of Frederick Starz. This mill had a capacity of 150 barrels per day.

Perpetual Motion

Perpetual motion, long a dream of inventors, was sought by the Delavan Orbit Engine Manufacturing Company, organized by Dexter Hardy. One engine was completed. On tests at the factory it is thought to have functioned, but when installed at the Hawley Coal Mine, south of Pekin, it failed to pull a load.

Other industries which started in Delavan, flourished for a time, and then faded in the face of modern competition, were a pork packing house, a butter and cheese factory, a creamery, a saddle and harness factory, and numerous tile and brick yards. One brick yard owned by Roland J. Beatty in the Seventies and Eighties operated both day and night shifts. Here the bricks were molded, dried in the sun, then baked in ovens.
Education

UNDS for providing educational facilities in the new settlement were allocated in the articles of the Delavan Association, which erected the first school building. It stood on the present site of the new armory, on Chestnut Street, across from the Colony House. The building, described at the time as "a good plastered building with four rows of seats where two scholars could sit at one desk, and benches for the younger ones," is still standing, although it has twice been moved, first in 1843, when the lot was sold. It now stands on Third Street, near Pine. Early teachers in Delavan included Timothy Vincent, Miss Sarah Cheever, Burt Newman and Samuel Briggs.

Before the school house was completed, a school was conducted by a Mrs. Homer in her home just north of the present city. The school term was just opposite to that of the present system, opening with good weather in the spring and continuing until late fall. There were four pupils, Jim, Almira, and Jennie Dorsett, and Emily Crossman. The teacher did her own work while teaching school, and the deportment is said to have been what might have been expected while Mrs. Homer was cooking dinner. Tuition for this school was $1 per term. Mrs. Emily Crossman Cobeain, in telling of this first school, said that the pupils used to wade in Little Crane Creek en route to school.

The first school house was also used for church purposes, a fact which led to an early sermon on the wayward tendencies of the younger generation. One of the pupils took a viol to school and the boys and girls participated in some of the popular dances of that day, such as the Virginia Reel, Money Musk, and a cotillion. The stove pipe, which was considerably longer in section than those of today, fell while the dancing was in progress. Not daring to tell what they had been doing, and unable to replace the pipe themselves, they did nothing toward restoring it. Sunday morning the congregation gathered, saw the soot-covered floor, and soon ascertained its cause. That morning the sermon was directed solely to the young people.

A new building of two rooms was erected in 1860. It stood on the present site of the city hall. Agitation toward the organizing of a high school district culminated in 1863 in a public meeting to discuss the question. J. C. Duncan presided and Horace L. Fisher acted as clerk. It was the consensus of opinion that although a high school was desirable, it was too expensive unless the township could be induced to cooperate. When the proposition was turned down by the township, no further action was taken towards additional educational facilities until 1871, when the present grade school building was erected. This three-story building, which was partially destroyed by fire December 4 of that year—the coldest day of the winter—was rebuilt in the summer of 1872 at a cost of but $250 more than the insurance collected. It was reopened in the fall as both a grade and high school, and has been in continual use since that time. It was renovated and an addition built in 1894.

The Delavan High School, the first high school in Tazewell County to teach Latin, graduated its first class (13 members) June 8, 1876. This was the second high school class to be graduated in the county, Pekin schools having graduated a class a year earlier. Members of this first class were: Emily Sherman Boyer, salutatorian, Mary F. Appleton, Allie Ray Lillibridge, Rose Anderson Herpich, Mary Jones Orendorff, Fred T. Lawton, Minnie Bryant McKinstry, Esten M. Vaughn, Julia Miller Garrett, Allie Brawner Landers, Mary Vaughn Lowe, Jennie L. Young, Alice Lawton Holmes, valedictorian.

In the late Fifties, the Misses Dickey opened a private school, which continued until 1863. This was followed by a "select school," conducted by Miss Susan Hopkins in a room over Crawshaw's store.
In this school the extra-curricular studies of Latin, music and needlework were featured.

A new high school district was organized in 1922. It included territory outside the city and was designated the Delavan Community High School District. D. M. Brown was elected president; John T. Culbertson, Jr., secretary; H. M. Wood, William Curtis, and R. L. Steiger, directors. Under their direction the old fair grounds on South Locust Street were acquired and a modern, two-story and basement building erected at a cost of $150,000. It contains 17 class rooms, a library, laboratories for physics, chemistry, and agriculture classes. There is a study hall which also may be used as an auditorium. It has a seating capacity of 350 persons. The new building was opened in January 1923.

An athletic field was constructed in 1937 as a Works Progress Administration project, and provides facilities for baseball, tennis, and track and field games. The school, which is fully accredited by the University of Illinois (1932), and the North Central Association (1933) offers full four year courses, college preparatory, commercial, agriculture, and home economics.

The present board consists of W. E. Ryan, president; R. M. Culbertson, secretary; H. W. Brink, W. M. Curtis and J. B. Sowa.

Ayer Public Library

PRECEDING the establishing of the Ayer Public Library in 1907, many efforts had been made to organize a library in Delavan. In 1873 a subscription library was opened by the Delavan Library Association, largely through the efforts of James T. Sanders, its treasurer. Each subscriber paid a quarterly fee of 50 cents for the use of books. Additional funds for maintenance were obtained from entertainments held in the old Phillips Hall. However, the task of raising adequate funds was tiring and after five years the library was closed.

The second library was opened in 1887 by Miss Delia Culver, and later a third was started by Miss Ina Kingman. Both of these were short-lived. The Woman's Club opened the fourth library in 1905, in a room above the Tazewell County Bank, and the fifth was started by the Blue Button Army, a temperance society, in a storeroom near the Alton Railroad station. This was removed to the building now occupied by the Regent Theater.

The Ayer Public Library began with the offer of Amos K. Ayer of Delavan to give $200 a year for 10 years for the purchase of books, provided the township would appropriate funds to maintain a library. In the spring election of 1907, the township, taking advantage of a recently enacted State law, voted a 1-1/10 mill tax to support a library, and thus Delavan secured the first tax-supported township library in Illinois. It was named in honor of Mr. Ayer, who had been active in its organization and who purchased the books and equipment of the Blue Button Army temperance society library and presented them to the township library. He also became its first president. When formally opened in September 1907, it had 2,100 books and 10 periodicals. Today it has 18,940 books and 31 periodicals. The first officers included Mr. Ayer, president; Mrs. Carrie A. Briggs, secretary; John Warne, treasurer; and Mrs. Louise Natress, Starr H. Beatty, and Frank Shelton, trustees.

A grant of $10,000 from the Carnegie Foundation was received in 1914 for the erection and furnishing of a modern building, and the present library was erected on the former site of Phillips Hall, which was donated by James Warren Crabb. Trustees at its dedication in 1914 were: C. G. Tomm, president; Mrs. Carrie Briggs, secretary; John Warne, treasurer; and Mrs. Louise Natress, Mrs. Lu-tetia Coyle, and Daniel Crabb. Miss Jessie M. Linbarger was librarian. The present board consists of Mrs. Amy Anders, president; Robert M. Culbertson, treasurer; Joe L. Regur, secretary; and Mrs. Amy Wood, Miss Jo Ryan, and D. H. Allen, trustees.
National Defense

At the outbreak of the Civil War, Delavan Township with a population of less than 300, raised the nucleus of two companies of infantry: Company H, 115th Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and Company B, 73rd Illinois Volunteer Infantry. When the troops were mustered and ordered to report to Camp Yates, Springfield, farmers of the community provided wagons with boards laid across the side boards for seats, and the men were taken to Atlanta, Ill., to entrain. Both companies served throughout the war.

Since 1878 Delavan has maintained a company in the Illinois Militia. Known locally as the "Delavan Blues", Company K, 7th Illinois Infantry, was organized early in 1878. On June 10th of that year it was mustered into service by Capt. C. C. Geiger, with 43 men. Company officers elected following the mustering ceremony were: Capt. George W. Patten, First Lieut. James W. Nichols, and Second Lieut. Eugene Orndorff. The company was equipped with muzzle loading Enfield rifles, noted for their heavy recoil. One of them is alleged to have "kicked the hammer off" during target practice. No uniforms were issued at that time by the State and the men were required to provide their own. Funds for this purpose were raised by giving dances, concerts and similar entertainments. Nearly all the men prominent in Delavan life have at some time been identified with this organization. Among those now living who were early members of the company are: James N. Hall, W. T. Dickson, and W. C. Duncan.

Social activity entered the ranks on September 6, 1878, when the company gave its first concert and grand ball, and again on June 19, 1879, when the Ruths, an organization of young ladies of Delavan, presented Company K with a silk flag.

Upon the resignation of Captain Patten in 1880, William Nichols was elected captain. He was succeeded by Charles C. Guild in 1881, who served as commanding officer until 1886 when he was promoted to the rank of major. In 1886 the 7th Regiment was consolidated into the 5th Regiment and Major Guild returned to the company as a captain, holding that post until 1891 when James E. Watkins was elected company commander.

During the Spanish American War, Company K was called into Federal service, but like other Illinois regiments, was never ordered into action. Under the command of Captain Watkins, assisted by First Lieut. Clarence H. Ball and Second Lieut. William T. Dickson, the company of 100 men entrained April 27, 1898, for Camp Tanner, Springfield. A farewell party, given on the eve of their departure from Delavan, was featured by the singing of a song, “Cuba Shall be Free,” composed by Mrs. Abbie A. Newman, outstanding Delavan musician. The Delavan Times-Press said: “A thousand friends followed the Company from the armory to the depot.” From Springfield, Company K accompanied its regiment to Chickamauga Park, Tenn., and then to Newport News, Va., before returning home, September 12, 1898.

Upon the promotion of Captain Watkins to major in 1900, Lieutenant Dickson was elected captain. He served until the election of John H. Perry as captain in 1901. Three years later W. E. Culbertson was elected captain. He commanded the company for nine years, when he was promoted to major of the 5th Regiment, and was succeeded by his brother, A. L. Culbertson. Guild, Watkins, and W. E. Culbertson, all of whom were promoted to major, each served more than nine years as captain, Major Culbertson’s term being a few months the longer.

After three years Capt. A. L. Culbertson removed from the city and went on the retired list. J. T. Hufty, long a member of the

During the World War, of the 125 Delavan men who served in the armed forces of the United States, 72 were members of Company K. It was mobilized March 26, 1917, by Lieutenant Inskeep, and, under the command of Capt. A. L. Culbertson, who was recalled from the retired list, left on April 3 for Southern Illinois where the company did guard duty for four months. After being recruited to full war strength of 187 men and three officers, Company K was ordered to Camp Logan, Houston, Texas, arriving there September 18. In the reorganization of the Illinois National Guard into the 33rd Division in October 1917, Company K, 5th Regiment, passed into the annals of history. It became Company B, 122nd Machine Gun Battalion. In January 1918 Capt. A. L. Culbertson was promoted to major and Capt. Hal L. Carr of Aurora was placed in command of Company B. After two months he was succeeded by Capt. James S. Daly of Chicago, who took the company overseas in April, 1918, and continued in command until the close of the war. Lieut. Charles F. Hoover, who was made a captain in France, brought the company home and was in charge until its demobilization. Lieutenant Inskeep was promoted to captain and commanded Company C, 124th Machine Gun Battalion, in France.

Company B, 122nd M. G. Battalion, composed largely of Delavan men, saw service in France in the Amiens sector, Somme offensive, Verdun sector, Meuse-Argonne offensive and Troyon sector, some of the most fiercely fought campaigns of the World War. Ernest Meador and Harry Holland were each awarded the Distinguished Service Cross and the French Croix de Guerre for remarkable feats of valor. Two of the company, Emory Whistler of Mackinaw, and Wilson Cole of Nokomis, were killed in action, and Harry Riddle of Minier, who went with Company B, was killed in action while a member of the 130th Infantry. A number of the men were wounded. After the signing of the Armistice the company went with the 33rd Division on its march into Luxembourg where it stayed until the first of May, 1919. On its return to the United States the company was mustered out at Fort Sheridan, Ill., in July 1919.

Recruiting for a company in the Illinois National Guard was started in December 1920, and in May 1921, Company D, 5th Infantry, I. N. G., was mustered into service under the command of Capt. C. E. Inskeep, First Lieut. J. B. Sowa, and Second Lieut. O. J. Imig. In the reorganization under the National Defense Act of 1921, the company became Company H, one of the three machine gun companies of the 130th Infantry, Illinois National Guard, a federalized unit which was given the name of a 33rd Division unit of the World War. Albert L. Culbertson, now a colonel, is in command of the regiment. In 1930 Colonel Culbertson was appointed Assistant Chief of the Militia Bureau, United States Army, a post he held for four years. On its first trip to camp in August 1921, Company H went to Springfield with 75 men and three officers, the largest company in the regiment.

J. J. Million was commissioned a second lieutenant in January 1922 on the resignation of Lieutenant Imig. He was promoted to first lieutenant and Earl M. Parlier was appointed second lieutenant in 1923 when Lieutenant Sowa resigned. Lieutenant Parlier resigned in May 1924, his vacancy being filled by the promotion of Hilmar A. Loehr. Captain Inskeep was promoted to major and assigned as machine gun officer of the 130th Infantry in September 1925. At this time Lieutenant Million was promoted to captain. Second Lieutenant Loehr to first lieutenant, and Sergeant Dean Patzer was appointed second lieutenant. Lieutenant Patzer resigned March 1927 and was succeeded by Charles O. Huffman of Manito. Captain Million resigned in January 1929, and a month later Lieutenant Loehr was made captain. Lieutenant Huffman was promoted to first lieutenant, and Howard S. Alexander was appointed second lieutenant. Lieutenant Alexander resigned May 1933 and the vacancy was filled by the promotion of Sergeant Howard F. Selk on July 22. Captain Loehr resigned January 11, 1935. Lieutenant Huffman was promoted to captain. Lieutenant Selk was promoted to first lieutenant, and Sergeant Julius E. Barnes was appointed second lieutenant, March 17, 1935. These officers are now (1937) in command of Company H.

The company has full equipment, including four machine guns, transport trucks, and everything necessary for a modern machine gun company, including a machine gun range north of the city on the Mackinaw river.

Work is now in progress on a new State armory which is being erected on Fourth Street between Pine and Chestnut, site of the first school house. The old Armory, now owned by Delavan Post No. 382, The American Legion, which has served almost continually for military activities, was erected 1883-1884 and leased by the State. Prior to that time the company was quartered in the old Webb hotel building. The armory was struck by a tornado in 1898 and set askew on its foundations while the company was at drill, but no one was injured.

During the period since May 1921, Company H has been called

Civil War Monument

The Civil War Monument in Public Square Park was first erected on West Third Street at the corner of Dickey Street. The location was for many years known as Indiana Hill, then a slight eminence now scarcely noticeable. In 1871, the Delavan Monument Association was instrumental in moving it to the park. Receipts and other records of the association kept by L. D. Lawton, treasurer, show that A. J. Nichols was paid $160 for hauling sand to the new location.

On the limestone base are engraved tablets inscribed with the names of Delavan men who served their country in war. Above are listed the battles in which they took part. A hexagonal shaft of stone, the pinnacle of which is covered by a shroud, is surmounted by an eagle with outspread wings. The name of the sculptor is unknown.

G. A. R. Memorial

In a triangle at the extension of Locust at Eighth Street, is a small gray granite slab. On it is the inscription "G. A. R. Triangle. A memorial to the Members of Delavan Post, No. 155, Grand Army of the Republic. Dedicated by The Last Surviving Member, William F. Hodson, November 11, A. D. 1935." Adjacent to the marker is a flagpole.

Tragedy is expressed in this marker, for Hodson passed away on Oct. 29, two weeks before he was to dedicate the marker. Members of the American Legion and the Community Club joined to hold dedication and memorial services at the triangle on the date of the inscription.
Tazewell County Fair

A pioneer among county fairs in Illinois, the Tazewell County Fair, held annually since 1879, was for years one of the outstanding agricultural expositions of the Middle West. The Prairie Farmer in describing the first fair stated that it was "the model fair of the whole West."

Its first officers were Ira B. Hall, president; William Knott, vice president; George H. Patten, secretary; and Rudolph Frey, treasurer. Members of the first board of directors were: Jacob Brennerman, B. T. Railsback, E. D. Fuller, J. H. Burt, J. D. Mourey, A. J. Paul, J. Warren Crabb, H. C. Sutton, and A. W. Ball. It was unique among fairs of that day, in that no gambling was permitted and no alcoholic beverages were sold on the grounds.

On the entertainment program of the fair of 1879 was Buckskin Joe, renowned Indian scout, and a troupe of 40 Indians who presented Indian games and dances and took part in a sham battle with the Delavan Blues. Another interesting event at that time was a "reunion" of the "Snowbirds," old settlers of the county who resided here during the winter of 1830-1831, when 8 days of snowfall deepened to 6 feet on the prairie, and covered tree tops in the drifts.

In 1880 the race track was improved, an amphitheater constructed, and harness races became a feature of the fair. A tornado which struck the northwest portion of the city in 1902 destroyed the amphitheater, the agricultural hall, and many of the stables, but these were replaced by more substantial buildings.

The Tazewell County Fair continued until the period immediately following the World War, when good roads and automobiles changed the social life of rural communities and decreased interest in this type of entertainment. The fortieth and last annual fair was held in August 1919. Officers of the board were: J. D. Phillips, president; John Betzelberger, vice president; V. A. Vetsch, treasurer; and John T. Culbertson Jr., secretary. It was the last to disband of a half-dozen fairs which once flourished in Tazewell County.

Newspapers of Delavan

The initial newspaper to be published in Delavan was the Delavan Advertiser, which appeared November 30, 1867, as an independent newspaper under the management of C. R. Fiske. It was printed in a building on the present site of the Christian church on the west side of Locust Street. After two years Mr. Fiske sold the paper to John Culbertson, whose strong democratic ideas changed the policy of the independent paper to that of his own convictions. During the campaign of 1872, the Advertiser supported Charles O'Connor for president, probably the only newspaper in the State for that candidate. Mr. Culbertson, who published the paper for nearly 40 years, sold out to T. H. Smedley, who later disposed of it to Keefer & Keefer.

Seven years after the founding of the Advertiser, Joseph F. Reed founded the Delavan Times. It was a four-page, eight-column paper, a large portion of which was set in six-point type. No local news was carried on the front page, which was devoted exclusively to State, national, and foreign news. The Times, because of competition, carried more than a little spice in its editorials, and soon commanded a great deal of favorable comment, developing a large circulation for a country weekly. During the operation of the first Tazewell County Fair, the Times was published daily. The paper was acquired by the firm of Boyd & Quigley in 1880 and sold a short time later to Newman & Beatty. Mr. Newman left the firm and Guy Beatty operated it alone until 1889. Then he and his brother, Starr Beatty, purchased the Tazewell County Press, a third newspaper, which had recently been started by Mr. Reed. The Times and the Press were then combined as the Delavan Times-Press. In 1893 Starr Beatty became sole owner, changing its name to the Tri-County Times. Under his management it became the outstanding Republican organ of the county. A consolidation with the Advertiser was effected by Mr. Beatty in 1918. When J. Ross Arnold bought the paper in September 1928, the name was changed to the Delavan Times, and the policy announced as independent. A complete file of the Times from 1874 to date is on file in the present Times office.

Prairie Rest

PRAIRIE Rest, a tree-covered plot on a knoll one-half mile east of Delavan, was established as a burial ground soon after the founding of the colony when three acres were set aside for that purpose by Deacon Henry R. Green, financial agent for the Delavan Association. No plat was made and no permanent records were kept until 1862, when it was platted by a township committee. Two early headstones are of interest. One dated 1842, is for George Green, a child, and one for John Brawner is dated 1843.

In early days no charge was made for the lots, and no tax was levied for cemetery upkeep. This lack of care lent impetus to the founding, March 10, 1875, of the Ladies’ Cemetery Association, which was organized to provide care for the cemetery. Mrs. N. B. Horton and Mrs. E. M. Strait called the first meeting, at which Mrs. M. F. Slocum was elected president, and Mrs. M. M. Upham secretary. Mrs. Slocum was succeeded two years later by Mrs. Amy Angell, who held the office for many years. Their first activity was a “tea in centennial fashion” which was held in Phillips Hall, March 19, and which netted $170. Additional land, known as the Green Addition, adjoining the old cemetery, was purchased by the association in 1877, when the site was given its name of Prairie Rest. Although the old section was township property, no care was given from public funds until 1884, when annual appropriations for cemetery upkeep were begun. Unsuccessful attempts were made to transfer the township grounds to the association in 1886, and again in 1904, but so closely had the articles of incorporation been drawn in 1877 that the transfer could not be accomplished. A second addition of 10 acres, known as the Crawford Addition, was purchased by the association in 1892. It was landscaped and platted, but was not officially opened until 1919. A mausoleum was erected in this addition in 1925.

Prairie Rest is maintained by donations from owners of lots in the Township section, taxes of $1 on lots in the newer sections, interest from a perpetual-care-fund, and rental from farm land not platted. Management of Prairie Rest is vested in the officers of the association, who (1937) are: Mrs. Eliza Alexander, president; Mrs. Helen M. Donley, vice president; Miss Olive G. Reid, secretary; Mrs. Agnes Rowe, treasurer, and a board of seven trustees, plus a committee of three elected annually at the town meeting.
From Time's Scroll

Henry R. Green

Henry R. Green, financial agent of the Delavan Association and one of the first settlers in the colony, was born in Greenwich, Kent Co., R. I., on February 28, 1788. As a stockholder and financial agent of the Delavan Association he came here in June 1837. Described as six feet in height and weighing more than 300 pounds, he was a forceful speaker with a powerful voice. Long a Baptist, he not only was a leader in founding the Delavan Baptist church, but often conducted the services. In 1847 he was elected as delegate from Tazewell County to the Constitutional Convention which drew up the Illinois Constitution of 1847. At his home at the east edge of the city he entertained many of the great political leaders of his day, including Abraham Lincoln, Stephen A. Douglas, John J. Hardin, Judge David Davis, Judge Stephen T. Logan, and Major Richard N. Cullom, father of Senator Shelby M. Cullom. Green and Douglas were warm friends, having many interests in common. Through the efforts of Green, Douglas was induced to contribute to the building fund of the local Baptist church. In 1839 Mr. Green opened a steam grist and saw mill, which he operated for several years. In 1850 he returned to Rhode Island, where he died on March 25, 1853.

Ira B. Hall

Ira B. Hall, first hotel proprietor of Delavan, came to Delavan in 1840 from Springfield. He soon persuaded the Peoria-Springfield stage coach line to change its route to include Delavan and his hotel became a scheduled stop and horse relay station. After four years he disposed of his hotel lease to James Phillips and turned to farming. Always active in community affairs, he was elected supervisor in 1856 and represented the district in the State Legislature in 1870. He was one of the early promoters of the Petersburg & Tonica Railroad and also of the Tazewell County National Bank.

Mr. Hall was born in Exter, R. I., November 12, 1812. After completing the common schools he worked for a time in a publishing house in New York City. He taught school in New York and also in Kentucky where he spent several years before moving to Springfield in 1839. At the State capital he became acquainted with many of the prominent men of that day, an acquaintance which helped him greatly when he opened the tavern in the old Colony House. He was twice married: first to Miss Mary Elizabeth Thurston, who died September 16, 1844, and then on February 11, 1846, to Miss Sarah H. Briggs. He died October 8, 1909.
Mrs. Emily Cobeau

Mrs. Emily Grossman Cobeau, only daughter of William W. and Mrs. Sarah Barton Grossman, was born at Taunton, Mass., November 11, 1834. Coming to Illinois with her parents in 1837, she remained in Tremont with her mother until October 1, when a portion of the Delavan House was finished. She married Eben Sanford on Thanksgiving day 1852. To them were born two children who died in infancy. After the death of her husband in 1857, she remained single until Christmas day 1869, when she married William Cobeau. There were two children of this marriage. Mrs. Cobeau died September 18, 1924, at the Eastern Star Home at Rockford.

William Cobeau

William Cobeau, for 40 years a constable of Delavan Township, was born at Gettysburg, Pa., December 3, 1832, and died at Delavan July 1, 1910. Coming to Illinois he first settled at Clinton before moving to Delavan in 1861. For eight years he drove the stage coach and carried the mail between Delavan and Atlanta where connections were made with the newly built Chicago, Alton & St. Louis Railroad before the Tonica & Petersburg line was completed. Later he drove a coach between Delavan and Peoria. Mr. Cobeau and his brothers for many years operated a livery stable in Delavan having a barn on Third Street, just west of the Tazewell County National Bank. On December 25, 1869, he was married to Mrs. Emily Grossman Sanford. He was a member of the Presbyterian church, the Masonic fraternity, and Order of Eastern Star.

S. M. Reinheimer

Solomon M. Reinheimer, first mayor of Delavan, was born in Bavaria, Germany, October 6, 1844. Upon reaching manhood he decided to make his home in America. Coming to Louisiana, Mo., he remained there but a short time working in a store. In 1868 he came to Delavan and opened a clothing store. Mr. Reinheimer served as village president from 1876 to 1878. In 1888, when Delavan was incorporated as a city, Mr. Reinheimer was elected mayor and held that office until 1891. He was a member of the A. F. & A. M., the Royal Arch Masons and a charter member of the Delavan Lodge of the Modern Woodmen of America. Mr. Reinheimer died March 8, 1919.
James L. Reid

James L. Reid, outstanding farmer and developer of Reid's Yellow Dent Corn, was born in Brown County, Ohio, December 26, 1844, the son of Robert and Anne Moore Reid, and came with his parents to Delavan Township in a covered wagon in 1846. With the exception of eight years in Kansas, his life was spent on the Illinois prairies helping develop its products. Following up the work of his father, who through force of circumstance had crossed the reddish colored Gordon Hopkins corn with the small, light yellow, flinty variety known as Little Yellow, Mr. Reid was largely responsible for the scientific development of the corn which now bears his name.

In 1902, he disposed of his Delavan Township farm and purchased another in Vermilion County where he continued his production of seed corn. For that farm he paid $100 per acre, the highest price on record up to that time for Vermilion County farm land. He shipped seed corn all over the United States and frequently to foreign countries, taking an active part in all phases of the work, seldom delegating it to others. Aged far beyond his years, he died June 1, 1910.

He was an active member of the Delavan Baptist church, the Illinois Corn Growers' Association, the Illinois Seed Corn Breeders' Association, and the Top Notch Farmers' Club.

Mrs. Abbie A. Newman

Mrs. Abbie A. Newman, best remembered as a teacher and a leader in music, cultural and social movements, was born in Westboro, Mass., November 28, 1830, and died at her home in Delavan, February 18, 1908. Following her marriage in April 1855, to Burt Newman, she first lived in Minnesota and then in Lower Alton, Illinois, coming to Delavan in 1862. For a period of more than two score years Mrs. Newman was an important figure in the life of Delavan. She taught the primary grade of the public schools for a third of a century, conducted singing schools, and also gave private lessons in music. She was for many years choirster of the Presbyterian Church. Mr. and Mrs. Newman were the parents of five children of whom but one survives, Mrs. Emma Giles. At the time of her death, Mrs. Newman's biographer wrote: "The full and true story of her life was written by herself in the life of the community, in the activities of the church she so faithfully served and in the hearts and characters of unnumbered children, now men and women grown and scattered to all parts of the United States. who learned fine things at her knee—to remember her ever after for the kind, gracious, sympathetic and lovable woman and teacher that she truly was."
James Huston McKinstry

James Huston McKinstry, farmer, grain dealer and churchman, was one of the most active in the building of the country surrounding the City of Delavan. Coming from Pennsylvania in 1852, in the next two decades he was instrumental in inducing 40 families from the same state to migrate to Delavan. He early engaged in the buying and shipping of grain and for a time was associated in that business with his cousin, John Nelson Huston, later United States Treasurer. Always active in community affairs, Mr. McKinstry was elected to several local offices, served two terms as township supervisor, and was active in the promotion of the Petersburg and Tonica Railroad. He was one of the charter members of the Delavan Presbyterian Church and served for ten years as one of its elders.

He was born in Franklin County, Pennsylvania, August 3, 1827.

J. C. Duncan

Joseph Culbertson Duncan was born July 29, 1822, at Big Spring, Cumberland Co., Pa. With his parents, he moved to Mercersburg, Pa., in 1826. In 1843 he united with the Presbyterian church. He married Miss Margaret McKinstry on February 4, 1845. Leaving Pennsylvania in 1850, he moved to Connersville, Ind. After reaching Delavan in 1856 he took an active interest in church work, becoming one of the charter members and the first ruling elder of the Presbyterian Church. After his wife's death in 1896, Mr. Duncan lived but a short while, dying in the spring of 1897.

J. Warren Crabb

James Warren Crabb, son of Daniel and Margaret Bailey Crabb, was born December 28, 1854, in Dillon Township. Following his father, he entered the banking business in Delavan and soon became active in the community. He was active in the promotion of the Tazewell County Fair Association and served for a time as president of its board of directors. Always taking a close interest in civic affairs, he served as an alderman and in 1893 was elected mayor of the city. He donated the site of Ayer Public Library to the township. He was a member of the Presbyterian Church, the Masonic fraternity, Mystic Shrine and Knights Templar. In 1875 he was married to Elizabeth Schureman, and to them were born three children. In a collision of his automobile with an Illinois Central train at the Locust Street crossing, he was killed March 30, 1926. As a mark of respect to one who had long served the people of his city, all business houses of the city were closed during his funeral.
Churches
Delavan Baptist Church

THE Delavan Baptist Church is the oldest congregation in the city. It traces its history back to the earliest days of the settlement, when several of the colonists met in the dining room of the Delavan House to hear the sermons of Rev. Isaac Merrian of Tremont, or the exhortations of Deacon Henry R. Green. The first Sunday School was organized prior to the church itself, when Mrs. Cynthia M. Gale took the five children of the congregation under her care and conducted classes in the kitchen of the hotel.

Efforts to perfect an organization met with success when seven members of the Baptist faith met in the old school house on October 26, 1846, and drew up their Articles of Faith. On December 17, another meeting in the school resulted in the formal organization of the church. The Rev. Merrian acted as moderator, and Rev. G. S. Bailey of Pekin as clerk. Nine persons were present. Henry R. Green, who had been ordained a deacon in Providence, R. I., Jonas R. Gale and Joseph Grant were the deacons of the new congregation, which consisted of the following members: John Daniel, Mrs. Annes Green, Mrs. Cynthia M. Gale, Mrs. Sarah Grant, Eunice Hall and Mary Ann Phillips. A year and a half later, June 8, 1848, the church was admitted to membership in the Illinois River Association at its meeting in La Salle, Ill. As the State became more thickly populated and more associations were formed, the local church entered the Bloomington Baptist Association, in which it now has membership.

The first step toward a permanent place of worship came during the pastorate of Rev. John Scrogin when, on September 18, 1851, the church purchased the entire block where the church now stands. The former owner was William Gammell of Providence, who had bought it in 1845 from the Delavan Association. On April 16, 1853, at which time the church was without a pastor, work was begun. Raising of funds in those early days was an extremely difficult task, and to add to the difficulties, Deacon Green, who had steered the church from its very beginning, died shortly after the building was started. However, work was pushed forward and on April 2, 1854, the building was completed. Rev. S. S. Martin, the newly called pastor, preached the dedicatory sermon. Among the notables who contributed to the building fund were Deacon Colgate of New York and Senator Stephen A. Douglas. The timber, which had to be hauled from the Mackinaw River 5 miles away, was donated and hewn by the members, who also gave freely of their time.
During these early years John Kelly led the choir, giving the tune with his bass viol. Later George Tefft led, giving the pitch with his tuning fork. After the purchase of an organ—the first church organ in the village—Charles Grant was appointed organist. Some of the members were opposed to "mechanical music," but the opposition soon died out. In the spring of 1856 a bell was purchased, and ever since has called the Delavan Baptists to worship. The old bell hangs in the belfry of the present building.

On the outbreak of the Civil War the church suffered set-backs when many of the leading young men of the congregation answered the president's call for volunteers. In April of 1861, a group of 23 members withdrew to form a congregation at Green Valley, and in 1868 a group of nine members formed a church at San Jose.

A parsonage adjacent to the church, costing $2,500 was erected in 1868. Part of the necessary money was procured by the sale of the north 100 feet of the church block. Hardly was the parsonage problem out of the way before members began discussing the desirability of a new house of worship. A subscription paper was drawn up in April 1876, for the present building. Nineteen months later the committee reported $1,138.85 had been pledged. Recovery from the financial panic of 1873 was slow in Illinois, and money was scarce. After five years, the committee, reporting that more than $2,000 had been secured, was directed to start a new building. Even then there were financial obstacles, but on January 21, 1883, the church, which had cost $6,106.34, was dedicated. The day was extremely unpleasant and the thermometer stood at 20 degrees below zero. Rev. Thomas P. Campbell, the pastor, conducted the dedication services, assisted by Rev. J. O. Hough of the Presbyterian Church and Rev. J. G. Little of the Methodist Church. The building committee consisted of J. S. Hemstreet, G. D. Randolph, and A. B. Cheever, clerk. Mr. Cheever succeeded Daniel Cheever, who resigned in 1877 after serving as clerk for 23 years.

Another outstanding day in church history is February 1, 1905, when 20 members were received by baptism. The church had gone a long way since February 9, 1852, when Caroline Kinman received the first baptism. The day was marred, however, by a fire which caused great damage to the parsonage. The building was soon restored by the concerted efforts of the members.

The seventy-fifth anniversary was celebrated in 1921 with a four-day program lasting through Sunday. At that time the pastor reported 169 members. Today there are 286 members.

The young people of the church have been organized for many years, the local B. Y. P. U. being older than the national society. The present pastor, Dr. Norton J. Hilton, is a brother of a former pastor, C. B. Hilton. Their father, Rev. A. W. Hilton, was a pioneer Baptist minister in Iowa and South Dakota.

Twenty ordained ministers have served the church:

Methodist Episcopal Church

In 1850 the Methodists, 20 in number, met and organized in the Delavan House. Later, meetings were held in the old school house. Among the early members were Samuel Hall, who often led the services, Samuel Briggs, Jesse Trowbridge, Levi Cheever and John Frazee. For a while the church was scarcely more than a circuit station without a regular pastor. Rev. J. H. Dimmitt was probably the first ordained minister to preach in the Delavan church, although as early as 1839 W. Brown was laying the foundation of Methodism. Since those early days there has been a long list of pastors, many of whom have become prominent in the Methodist ministry. On October 1, 1851, during the pastorate of the Reverend Miller, who sometimes conducted services here, the trustees purchased from Solomon Townsend of Providence the entire block No. 25. The trustees at that time were Samuel Hall, Jesse Trowbridge, Samuel Briggs, Abner H. Underhill and Jonathan Frazee.

A small frame church was built in 1852. The difficulties and the sacrifices of that effort are quite forgotten today. Many of the members had little to offer except their time and brawn, but all gave freely. The men of the congregation made the brick and hewed the timbers for this church. The old first church, now incorporated into a portion of an implement shop, may still be seen on the lot north of the present church building. In 1857 the parsonage was built with the proceeds from the sale of the north part of the block. The old parsonage was used until near the close of the century, when the new one was erected.

Outgrowing the little frame church, the congregation decided upon a new building which was to cost $12,000. In 1867, a building committee was appointed, and was composed of William Youle, Harvey Pratt, Benjamin Wilson, John Holmes, Samuel Lawton and Charles Gale, secretary. The first floor of the structure was finished and dedicated on December 5, 1869. A second floor auditorium was added and was dedicated on January 16, 1876, a day long remembered as being severely cold. In spite of the unfavorable weather, a large number of members and friends came to attend the dedicatory services. Rev. Henry Fowler, who later became a bishop, delivered the dedication sermon. Rev. W. S. Hooper was pastor. The two towers added in 1889.90 completed the building as it stood for nearly 40 years. In 1929 the annex was added to the north side of the church, and many improvements were made in the original structure, which was re-dedicated on January 26, 1930. Rev. Otto E. Martin, the pastor, was assisted by Bishop Edwin Holt Hughes of the Chicago area. A number of visiting clergymen, including the pastors of the Delavan Baptist and Presbyterian Churches, also took part in the services, which lasted 6 days.

The auditorium occupies the main floor while Sunday School rooms are on the first or ground floor. The pulpit and pews installed at the time of the re-dedication were gifts of children of former members in honor of their grandparents, John and Isabel Holmes. The annex, built to make the church an attractive center for the activities of the younger members, has a large gymnasium with shower baths and the latest type of gymnasium equipment. The main room of the annex has a seating capacity of 250, and is used by the adult Bible classes. To the side is a kitchen with accommodations for more than 300. Large doors open from the annex to the church auditorium.

Under the pastorate of Rev. F. Roy Doland, the church now has a membership of 427. The Sunday School has an enrollment of 187 in addition to 22 children on the cradle roll. The work of the Sunday School is conducted by a staff of 16 teachers, aided by the 14 stewards and nine trustees. The Epworth League of the Delavan church helps to maintain a missionary in Chile. The church has been served by the following pastors:

Church of God

The Church of God of the Reformation Movement held its first meeting in the City Hall on July 19, 1931, with Rev. D. N. Slagell, formerly of Fairbury, Ill., as the first pastor. The charter members, numbering 17, consisted of Mr. and Mrs. Joe Kauman, Mr. and Mrs. Velde Myers, Mr. and Mrs. George Leipold, Mr. and Mrs. Kenneth Ciscoe, Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Johnson, Mr. and Mrs. Ralph Hoar, Claude Hoar, Betty Naiziger, Mrs. Elizabeth Schantz, Barbara Schantz and Christian Schantz. The congregation meets in the James Hall building on the east side of Locust between Fourth and Fifth Streets.
Presbyterian Church

The Presbyterian Church was organized in Delavan on June 19, 1855, by Rev. W. T. Adams of Washington, Ill. Many of the original members had recently come from the vicinity of Mercersburg, Pa., and were of the branch of the church then known as the Old School Presbyterians which later united with the Presbyterian Church in America. At the first meeting, J. C. Duncan and Ralph Martin were elected ruling elders, and John H. McKinstry and William E. McDowell, deacons. The Sunday School was started at the same time. The charter members of the church, 22 in number, were: Mrs. Martha Crawford, Mrs. Jane Davidson, Miss Nancy R. Davidson, Miss Sarah Bell Davidson, William and Mrs. Mary C. Dorrence, J. C. and Mrs. Margaret M. Duncan, John Harbison, Ralph and Mrs. Eliza Martin, J. H. and Mrs. Sarah J. McKinstry, John and Mrs. Anna M. McKinstry, Thomas and Mrs. Mary A. McKinstry, Jacob and Mrs. Catherine McCollister, William E. and Mrs. Elizabeth McDowell and Mrs. Susan Work.

The congregation met at first in the home of the members or in the old school house, but as the membership grew, services were held in the Baptist and Methodist Churches. The present site, at the northwest corner of Fourth and Spruce Streets, was purchased January 23, 1856, from Lucius Fisher, and a building was begun in July 1857. It was completed 2 years later at a cost of $4,400 and when dedicated was free of debt. Brick used in the church was made near the creek, north of the present grade school. It was at this time that the Rev. S. M. Templeton, the first resident pastor, took up his duties. The building was enlarged in 1872 at a cost of $4,600, and further remodeling was done in 1886. At that time a pipe organ—the first to be seen in the city—was installed, largely through the effort of Jacob McCollister. The corner stone of the present brick structure was laid October 4, 1903. Dedication services were held May 15, 1904, with Dr. George L. Robinson of the McCormick Theological Seminary, Chicago, delivering the sermon, and Dr. F. C. Everitt, pastor, in charge of the services. The cost of the new building was $16,000. A new pipe organ was also installed. During the pastorate of Rev. Roger Sillars, excavations were made for a basement room. The Men's Class, of which the Rev. Sillars was the leader, was assisted in doing the work by other men of the city, and Mrs. W. H. Baldwin's class of young women provided dinners for the men while they were engaged in this work.

One of the outstanding beauties of the church is the atmosphere created in the auditorium by the stained glass windows. Unusually large, the windows are reproductions of two paintings by Bernhard Plockhorst (1825-1907), a noted German artist. The west window shows the Good Shepherd, while the east window portrays the Women at the Tomb. The latter is especially beautiful at the time of the Easter Sunrise Service, when the morning sunshine streams through the glass. A third and smaller window over the pulpit showing Christ in Gethsemane is the work of Heinrich Hoffman (1824-1902). This window is a memorial to the Rev. Templeton, first pastor of the church.

Music has long been a factor in the success of the church. In the early days, J. H. Burlingame led the singing, giving the pitch with his tuning fork. The tuning fork gave way to the little reed organ about 1865. Miss Siddie Maclay and Miss Florence Hull were the first organists. Prominent among the choir leaders have been L. D. Lawton, Mary Holmes Thompson, Charles Duncan, Leo Stumbaugh and Arthur Zorn, who directed the last Easter Cantata.

The Woman’s Missionary Society was formed in 1876 by Mrs. J. G. Johnson of the Peoria Presbytery. Mrs. Harris Upham was its first president. Two former members of the church have been missionaries to China. Miss Eva M. Burlingame, deceased, taught the Chinese in California, where she acquired their language before taking up her station in Canton. Miss Belle Duncan, formerly in charge of a girls’ school in China, is now receiving aid from the Delavan Church for her work. Another strong missionary society is the Sarah B. Davidson Guild, which was organized in January 1908, in the home of Mrs. Daniel Crabb. The Guild, from 1908 to 1926, contributed more than $1,500 to missions both in this country and abroad. During this period, Dr. Thornton of the Shantung Christian University was supported in his work chiefly through the efforts of the Guild.

A third organization, the Westminster Guild, composed of girls of high school age, has recently been formed. It is also missionary in its activities.

Christian Church

THE Christian Church in Delavan, now disbanded, was founded in 1892 by Rev. Oliver W. Stewart, ardent prohibitionist and legislator, then pastor at Mackinaw. The founding followed seven weeks of daily evangelistic meetings. Services were held in the armory until the church, that stands on the west side of Locust between Second and Third Streets could be erected. The building is now used as a garage. Under the leadership of the Rev. Stewart and Rev. G. W. Smith, the first pastor, the church grew in numbers and at one time occupied an important place in the religious life of the city. Gradually, however, its 50 members dwindled through deaths and removals and finally the congregation disbanded.
St. Mary’s Church of the Immaculate Conception

The Roman Catholic Church in Delavan dates back to 1859, when Father Maher of Lincoln came at the request of James Ryan, George Leoni and Daniel Reardon to organize a parish. Meetings were held at first in the homes of the members, with mass celebrated in the Delavan House until the parish was able to erect its own building. Father Maher served the parish until 1862, when he was succeeded by Father Martini, also of Lincoln, who for two years came to conduct services. Father Murphy of Pekin, during the next 3 years, came regularly to Delavan to care for the parish. In September 1867, Rev. John W. Kennedy became pastor and remained here until June 1869, when death claimed him.

On June 15, 1868, James Ryan purchased from James Phillips for $100 the lot at the northeast corner of Second and Cedar Streets and erected a church there, according to county records, which however, have been disputed locally. Title to the property remained in the Ryan family until October 30, 1880, when James Ryan and his wife, Margaret, deeded it to the Right Rev. John Lancaster Spalding.
The Rev. Spalding had recently become bishop of the Peoria diocese. It was at this time, some oldsters say, that the church was built.

The first church was a small frame building with a wooden cross above the roof. Like all churches of pioneer communities, it was neither elaborate nor pretentious, but it filled the needs of the little parish for many years. The first parish house stood on Fourth Street opposite the present city building. A second home was built on the northwest corner of Second and Cedar across the street from the church.

The present modern church and parish house, standing on the northeast corner of Fourth and Linden Streets, were erected in 1906 during the pastorate of Rev. A. A. Stapleton, and are of red face brick. The large stained-glass memorial windows of the church show events in the life of Jesus. The parish, with the out-mission at Hope-dale, has 65 families. In the 78 years since the organization of the parish, 27 pastors have ministered to the Catholics of Delavan.
